Alexandria Gazette

WEDNESDAY EVENING, AUGUST 15.

Alexandria. The tide throws up its circling flood Against the rotting piers That long untrod by men have stood The footsteps of the years.

The slimy moss hangs down between The slanting beams, and sways Like a dull pendulum of green Counting the sluggish days.

The water snake coils up below, And drags its slippery length From out the yellow waters flow; The rat gnews in his strength.

And, in and out, the upright beams The beetles run; and wets Of spiders, moist with silvery gleams, Stretch, tangled, round like threads.

No sound is heard; the grass grows high; The ships moor far a-tide; And ghosts do seem to walk a nigh The quays so old and wide.

O day of pride, O day of power When vessels anchored lay, And wharves, bedecked with princely dower, Loomed up in strong array;

When fruitful West sued at thy doors, And East held out its hands. And thou, gray piers, on thy green shores, Were gates to many lands!

Beyond, the ancient town creeps on To foot of treeless hill; And pigeons brood in Southern sun On the gabled roofs at will.

O'er cobbled streets the wheels roll slow, With grasses crushed between ; And moss-grown trees o'er panes hang low, And eaves to branches lean.

() town of old, with changeless life, With graves and memories dear, Thy ways are writ with wrongs of strive, But ne'er with line of fear!

Though leaves drop on dismantled way, Though quaint old houses fall, Still is brave struggle of thy day Carved on each massive wall; Thou'st nurtured men in cradle grim-Great in the proud world's heart; And thy lone wave chants century's hymn To dead that lie apart.

Away with sneer that waits for thee, O gray old town and brave! I love each stone, that text for me, Speaks by Potomac's wave.

Thy sons live on; the lapping tide Sings their song, as it sang A ree in far o'er ocean wide When cry of free dom rang.

Though owl should scream in high church And snake coil in the street, Thy years shall tell of glory's hour, Thy past our pride entreat.

Ebb from the piers, O yellow tide, Make music sweet and low; I seem to hear, as sanctified, The song of long ago.

MARIE LEBARON.
